Join with us now as we take you out to the barren western desert where Professor Charles Cargraves and General Garson are proceeding with their work on the first of these satellites.

Later, if all goes well, we shall go along with them on the...

"MYSTERY in MOROCCO"

General Jacques Dupreme was not a happy man. In charge of the French Army in Morocco he was finding that his lot was becoming more difficult each day.

"We will establish a curfew," he told young Lieutenant Paul Nudan. "I want everybody off the streets from 9 P.M. to 5 A.M. We must stop all rioting and demonstrations. You will have the Sixth Senegalese Light Infantry ready to move in a minute's notice to any part of Casablanca. The gendarmes will also be in full battle equipment. We must break the terror at all cost. If we could only find the people responsible for this!"

"What about the famous American known as Agent V?" questioned the young officer. "I understand he is on his way here to help us."

The general shrugged his shoulders. He was about to reply when the phone on his desk rang. He answered it briefly.

"More headaches," he told the young officer. "One of those American tourists with lots of letters of introduction from men prominent in American political life, Mr. John Mederson is outside. Wants to take pictures and see Casablanca. You will be responsible for his safety. He is coming in now."

The door to the general's office was opened and a well dressed man passed the two armed guards. It was hard to tell his age. His skin was white and lineless. He might have been in his early thirties or forties. Offhand you would be ready to comment that he must have led a life of ease. You could not spot the superbly trained athletic body that could spring into action in the fraction of a second.

From his neck hung a strap attached to his leather camera case. Around his left shoulder was another strap attached to the familiar gadget bag.

"Mr. John Mederson meet Lieutenant Paul Nudan," introduced the general. "He will take you around the city and show you the sights. Unfortunately these are troubled times and you both will have to be careful."

Outside the headquarters there was a jeep with a driver. The two men entered and sat on very uncomfortable seats. The driver had a light submachine gun at his side. As they drove, the lieutenant explained things about Morocco.

"The important cities of Morocco are along the Atlantic coastal plain. They are important commercial centers and there's a lot to be seen in each. In addition to Casablanca there are Marrakech, Fez, Meknes, Rabat, Sale, Safi, Mazagan, Port Lyautey, Agadir, and Mergador. Morocco's most important industry is agriculture. Its chief products are cereals, olives, grapes, citrus fruits, and almonds. Sheep raising is also important. The western and northern slopes of the Atlas Mountains, facing the rain bearing winds from the ocean are thickly forested. You will find oak, cedar, cork, and cone bearing trees. Anything else you want to know, just ask me."

The jeep came to a sudden stop. The American had noticed something peculiar on a house and got out to investigate. He was followed at once by Lieutenant Nudan.

"Anything wrong?" asked the officer.

"Anything wrong?" repeated another voice which belonged to a man dressed in an immaculately clean white suit.

"Monsieur Dubreuil," half scolded the young officer. "That is a dangerous thing to do. Coming out of the shadows that way. But then what can one expect from a journalist. I assume you are looking for a story for your paper."

"Correct guess," replied the middle-aged Marcel Dubreuil. "And I guess you are showing one of the American tourists the sights. But what startled him?"

John Mederson pointed to a hand painted on the door of the house.

"Why the hand?" he asked.

"Because this is Morocco," explained Monsieur Dubreuil. "Here we have the belief in the Evil Eye. And please, as an American, do not laugh at it. Hundreds of precautions are taken to ward off the Evil Eye or to nullify its effects. One reason for the veiling of women here is protection from the Evil Eye. The drawing of the human hand you see is another precaution. It is called 'Five in Your Eye'. If you permit me to go with you, I will show you some of the sights of Casablanca."

The offer was accepted and the three men entered the jeep. They drove on for a mile and then stopped in front of a large place.

"This is our most famous cafe," said Dubreuil. "Come in and be my guests."

They were seated at a table and watched some dancing girls.

"Can I take some pictures," asked John Mederson.

"Not unless you want to start a riot," replied the lieutenant.

"Excuse me for a few minutes," interrupted Dubreuil. "I see an old friend at another table. The waiter will take your order."

A few minutes later the waiter appeared. He raised his right hand and John Mederson went into action! He twisted that hand until the razor edged knife fell to the ground.

"ESH-E5-mik?" (What is your name?) asked the tourist.

The young officer had his revolver in his hand. A crowd was gathering around the table. The journalist hurried back to see what was wrong.

"Tried to kill the American tourist," explained Lieutenant Nudan. "But why?"

"The mysteries of Morocco sometimes can't be explained," said Dubreuil. "Suppose we get out of here in a hurry before more trouble starts. The friends of this waiter must be well armed."

"I want him arrested for attempted murder," insisted John Mederson. "There must be a reason why he tried to kill me and I want to find out."

"In a few minutes it will be too late to get out of here alive," warned Marcel Dubreuil.

"You won't want to make a couple of wagers on it?" challenged the American tourist with determination in his voice. "We are going to get out of here and bring this waiter with us to the police headquarters for questioning."

Somebody shouted something in Arabic and a mob started to charge the group. The gadget bag was opened in the fraction of a second and John Mederson threw a small glass bulb at the mob. It exploded and gave off a greenish gas. The men coughed and started to choke.

"Let's get out of here with the waiter right now," ordered the firm voice of John Mederson.

But when they came to the car, the waiter was a corpse. There was no surprise on the face of the American tourist. He insisted on going to police headquarters. There the matter was explained to Colonel Jean Legrand.

"He certainly is a brave tourist," commented Monsieur Dubreuil rather dryly. "And also thoughtful and resourceful. Especially since he also carried miniature chemical bombs in his gadget bag."

The doctor in attendance made a quick check of the dead waiter and then gave his report.

"It was a hypodermic needle and the poison worked very quickly."

"To stop his mouth from telling who ordered him to kill me," added John Mederson. "I would have been given the same dose but it would have been too obvious and betrayed you, Monsieur Dubreuil."

A revolver appeared in the hand of the journalist who showed no sign of fear.

"You are very clever, Agent V," he replied. "I am expendable and the party will get others to do my work. But die you must even though I go with you."

He pulled the trigger three times before he was disarmed. Yet the American didn't flinch nor was he wounded. He just said one sentence.

"Our new Nylon Bullet Proof Vest is a success."

For a week all had been quiet in Casablanca. But General Jacques Dupreme, Lieutenant Paul Nudan, and Colonel Legrand were all puzzled men.

"How did the terrorists know what homes to bomb?" questioned the police official.

"Only those homes that had six fingers on a hand," replied Agent V. "Your government wanted me to find out who was fingering the homes. It was the extra finger that did it. Who would suspect Monsieur Dubreuil of being a red agent? He had free access to all of the city. All he had to do was add that extra finger for the terrorists to go into action. I spotted the extra finger. He wanted me killed without betraying his identity."

"Now I know why they call you Agent V," replied the general.

"V for Victory, the Victory of Democracy over Red Tyranny."

BUT THEN...

UH-OH, THOSE NO-
GOODS HAVE PICKED UP MY TRAIL AGAIN!
A CAR'S FOLLOWING
ME!

I'M NOT KEP ENOUGH TO PARIS TO KNOW HOW MANY TRAFFIC LAWS I BROKE WHILE TRYING TO SHAKE THAT CAR-- BUT...

THEY'RE CLOSING IN!

THE OUTSIDE SPOTLIGHT! IF I CAN TURN IT AROUND, I'LL BIND
THE BIG BAD WOLVES!

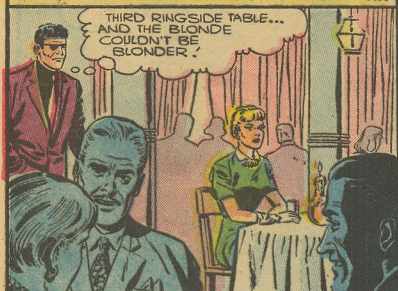

GOOD ENOUGH! IT'LL
TAKE A GOOD TEN MINUTES FOR THEM TO UNTANGLE THEMSELVES!

FOREIGN INTRIGUES

SO I WAS STILL ALL IN ONE PIECE AND AS PROUD OF MYSELF AS A GIRL WHO'D SEWED HER FIRST STITCH -- WHEN I EASED INTO THE CAFE MOULIN...

COULDN'T WAIT TO GET THAT RENAULT
PURRING TOWARD THE QUIET

THAT, FOLKS, WAS WHAT THEY

ON-- MY LEAVING SO
FAST...

...BECAUSE JUST AS I HIT THE STREET, I SAW
THIS BIG LONG JOB SCOOTING BY, AND AT THE WHEEL SMILING LIKE A CAT WHO'D JUST DINED WELL ON A MOUSE WHO'D BEEN IN-VITED OVER MAH-JONG, WAS...

THE LITTLE RUNT!!
HE'S STILL ALIVE!

I'VE BEEN BAMBOOZLED...
PLAYED FOR A CHUMP! MR.
RUNT'S WORKING FOR THE OTHER SIDE! HE STOLE
THOSE PLANS FROM US.

HE FIGURED I HAD A BETTER CHANCE
THROUGH THAN HE DID!

I FLEW INTO THAT RENAULT FASTER THAN YOU COULD SAY, JOHNNY CHUMP DYNAMITE...
